

Cultural Programming

Cultural conditioning is part of every social order. However, in most social orders, people receive cultural programming as part of their “socialization” from the time they are born until they die. These cultural programs are installed in their minds by cultural programming systems/institutions such as religion, education systems, political systems, and in modern times, corporate advertising and media systems.

The people receiving this programming are never made aware of the processes that are being used to mold and condition their minds and personalities. Most people are completely unaware of the conditioning they have received. This is an inherent feature of societies. All of them do it.

In order for an individual to take control of this process and escape from the control it imparts to those who apply it, the individual must understand how it works.

Individual social conditioning must occur as part of a cohesive framework which encompasses a common language and belief system. Without it individuals cannot communicate or work together.

Language is a social communication program. A shared understanding of symbols and meaning.

The framework of the social order is represented in the individual’s mind by the “cultural mythology”. This is the set of beliefs which are installed into the individual’s mind. However, the framework represented by the “cultural mythology” and the real framework are never the same.

All social orders have a framework, whether or not it is explicitly defined. In fact most social orders have an explicit definition which is specifically crafted to hide the real or implicit framework i.e. The United States “Freedom and justice for all.” In 1776 that means freedom and justice unless you are a slave, a woman, or non-white. What was said and what was meant (and implemented) are 2 different things.

Freedom is a concept inside a framework and is constrained/bounded by the framework i.e. your “freedoms” are those afforded you by the government and those in power.

“Freedom” must be based on a standard set of social programming. Allowing dysfunctional and dangerous individuals (psychopathic oligarchs) to develop is unacceptable. Psychopaths are not “free” to develop in the new social order.

The purpose of cultural conditioning must be to ensure that the population has the self awareness, personal control, and understanding to prevent the social system from being infiltrated and taken over by psychopaths.

In any society individual perception over time becomes social reality. This is the logical realization of the “intent in the design” of the society. What the people THINK determines how they ACT which determines the SOCIAL REALITY.

In Strategic Social Architecture, the idea is to take control of this natural behavior so that there is a feedback loop giving the individual control rather than being controlled by the “invisible hand.” In Strategic Social Architecture, the people THINK for themselves, ACT based on their own initiative and understanding, and create an intentional SOCIAL REALITY.

We decide on the cultural programming and then we program ourselves!
